RALFIRICAN Sept. 12, 1803.

Dr. J. N. Hongreack.—Dear Sir. I feel it my duty to bear testimony to the excellent results of your worm syrup. My daughter Eliza was affilized for some months with a violent pain in her stomach, accompanied with swelling of the links to such a degree that my family physician decided to be goot, and treated her accordingto. Who give the finds to such a degree that my family physician decided to be goot, and treated her accordingto. Who give the finds to such a degree that my family physician decided to be goot, and treated her accordingto. Who give the finds to such a degree that my family physician decided to be goot, and treated her accordingto. Who give the finds and the finds of the such particular to be goot, accompanied with severe pains in the region of the howels while the medicine was netting. No reliaf being had by either of the above-named corrects of treatment we were in despair, and Eliza continued to grow worse and worse, the abdomen being quite distended, so much so that we were afraid the disease was droppy. At this stage a friend from your city called to see us, and heard of the sad rate of Eliza. He advised trying your worm syrup, and alternating with your liver pills; said he never left home without a supply of sach in his trunk, and offered us some to try. He went to his hotel and returned with two hottles of your worm syrup and a box of liver pills. Eliza gladly took a dose of the first on going to bed, and continued the mext two days, all the while operating freely, but ascempanied with a severe pain in the bowels. On the evening of the second day she passed a mass of worms—fully a pound of them—seeming now the secret of all ber disease. We pursued the treatment and found to our delight the swelling of the abdomen was gone, but her legs were still bis. He was entirely relieved from all disease whatever, and is now as hearty a looking young woman as there is in the country. She feels as we do, grateful fo

Dyspeptile, Kidney and Dropsteal Complaints.—Wolfe's Schiedam Aromatic Schnapps, where taken in proper quantity as a diet drink, and especially at dinner, is found to be effectual in the most obstinate instances, when the use of other remedies has been pursued in vain.
